Summary of key rules. The four most important typographic choices you make in any document are point size, line spacing, line length, and font (see font combinations), because those choices determine how the body text looks. Point size should be 10-12 points in printed documents, 15-25 pixels on the web.

While there is a clear difference between human character animation and motion design (or motion graphics), the 12 principles are still applicable across these processes. Designer and animator Cento Lodigiani describes the 12 Basic Principles of Animation in a series of short animations using a simple cube. This graphical examination is a perfect analogy demonstrating how the principles can be applied to motion design.
